All this has happened before

All this has happened before and is happening again By Shane Nolan

“The environmental move ment was basically hijacked by political and social activists,who came in and very cleverly learned how to use green rhetoric and green language to cloak agendas that had more to do with anti-corporatism,anti-globalisation, anti – business and very little to with science and ecology..and that is when I left” – Patrick Moore founder and former president of Greenpeace

After finally realising my life long dream to get into college I began writing little tidbits and ideas that had formed in my head over the past year of how my main interest in life, science could be used for the betterment of mankind. This at least more noble rather than for being bastardized for the corruptible ideologies of capitalism and communism throughout the cold war era and again when history repeated itself during the first decade of our current century with the politicization of this field allowing it to be essentially hijacked by both democrats and republicans globally first with the “sexed up” Iraq WMD documents and then the global warming debacle we had .So I did research and looked into new and emerging technologies that relieve the worlds ills from poverty,environmental degradation etc.

Unfortunately as I had just enrolled in a four-year college course and my work suffered to the point that it had to be abandoned altogether. So one idle weekend I was searching for videos on Richard Dawkins (by then I had become interested in the creationism/intelligent design and evolution debate and happened across a video called “The Truth about Religion” on you tube and was amazed at what a steaming pile of shit this was as I was laughing out loud It wasn’t until an idle Saturday in February of 2009 that I watched the same video again to disprove it my self that I found out it was from an internet conspiracy movie called “Zeitgeist”(which I eventually watched in full...and laughed even more) and there was another more factual(I’m stretching the word here) sequel called Addendum.

So after watching Addendum I was enamoured by the Zeitgeist Movements goal and Jacques Fresco since I agreed(and still do) with on some,but not all of the views he had to present particularly on education.Addendum was a relief that at least someone got the concept out.Due to this passion for all the concepts of the movement I had long believed in I became one of those people who used every social networking site,similarly themed videos on you tube and even yahoo answers to defend and “spread the message” of the movie(Addendum only).I was treading that thin line between calm rationality and fanaticism preparing arguments in my head with the adrenaline coursing through my veins .I introduced the idea to my brother who had his own dreams of building his business(I didn’t show him any of the “material” as even I laughed at all of the designs)and he just roared at me for about an hour about it being garbage and even when I told him of the RBE Foundation (which I had joined by then) who were actually serious about this he then laughed in front of my face and called all of us idiots.

By then I had become less fanatical but it finally hit me harder than a Pan Galactic gargleblaster that we’ve already been here before:

Lets run down the list:

1. Wideley released and award-winning movie waking people up to a major problem in the world...check
2. Use of the same debunked graphs and data and Powerpoint presentations....check
3. Capitalising on major social or environmental catastrophe...check
4. Prophesing social/environmental doom....check
5. Reuse of human/animal suffering to reiterate the point...check
6. Unquestionable self appointed leaders with no qualifications on what they are talking about...check
7. Jet crossing all over the world on other peoples money from luxury standard home....check
8. Using said money to also fund “their research” ...check
9. Prophet figure utilising their own company as the only solution through selling products and means of solving the problem...check
10. Same automated emails and messages about being too busy with spreading the message to answer...check
11. Anti-capitalist, anti-corporate agendas....check
12. Hollywood movie about people looking back how “primitive” current society was...check
13. Saturate the market with new and innovative ways of “spreading the message”
14. Oscar win and Nobel peace prize from global awareness campaign ...I sure hope not

The truth that most “movementarians” as I like to references The Zeitgeist Movement and all those involved are pretty much spouting the same shit the environmentalist movement have been spouting since Rachel Carson decided to carry out mass genocide in Africa and Al Gore replaced Patrick Swayze as Captain Planet.

In fact most of them are pretty much from the same camps (you can move sheep from flock to flock that doesn't make any less sheep) and won't even admit the fact that they are doing the same mistakes all over again.

This is why most people and media outlets won't listen to them because they've had the same shit pushed down their throats already and not because of their "conditioning" or they are "too into the system". The reality is that people have already been bitten and are hesitant to join or even consider a group that spouts the same notions of activism and some of these "activists" are guilty of this and even brainwashing people into their cult before they consider looking at anything critically [1].

Like most fields of study there are three types of people in the world of science: scientists who are experts in their field and adhere to the stringent protocols of the peer review process and have credentials, then you have enthusiasts people who are not experts and have no credentials but where it's more of a hobby and still are aware of and respect the processes involved, and then of course there is the bullshitter people who know nothing about anything and show total disregard for the peer review processes, usually out for a buck.

The reality is that the Zeitgeist movies were made for a specific audience, Jacques and Roxanne have succeeded in grasping the blissful ignorance of the masses with effective teaming with a fellow bullshitter (and a good one too). Unfortunately as usual genuine and well-meaning people are getting hooked into it and this is saddening and like before to see them defending the fanatic and cultish members simply by being there and taking part like any other fanatical activist groups makes it even more depressing. Essentially this hive mind is a mish-mash of creationist and extremist environmentalist ideological nonsense drowning out any progress and reason by making them feel guilty for having a life.

Former members and those working for the RBEF voiced serious concerns about transparency, organisation and the actual research needed for this to be done repeatedly attempted to get them sorted out and bring them to the attention of the "three stooges" as I like to call them. Roxanne and Jacques cleverly skirted around these issues in every interview they have (sound familiar) [2], the RBEF sorted them out (with a fraction of the members and resources at their disposal I might add) and ended up being presented with the threat of legal action and were unable to officially do anything due to pending legalisation. This is contrary to the fact that Roxanne and Jacques even stated in interviews in which they would condone the implementation of an RBE by groups other than The Venus Project [3].

Which brings me to the final point, the truth is we don't need to go through all this crap. We don't need to keep coming up with new ways of spreading the message (because like the environmentalist movement the culture it mainly operates in it has already saturated the internet) or do that all anymore because we have research centres, we don't have to make any more movies or books because there is already a wealth of work about post-scarcity societies from Star Trek TNG [4] and Voyager series (every episode available on YouTube for FREE), hints in Douglas Adams [5,6] work and dealt with by virtually every science fiction author from the 60s and 70s. Even I thought up of this without ever hearing about the Technocrats and Jacques or anything to do with The Venus Project which reiterates the point that trade marking is pointless. Furthermore we don't have to seek much outside donations as if every member were to donate $100 (hardly breaking the bank here) they would have more than $30 million to give existing research centres enough to get new automated technologies etc a good start. This is more than enough to get things off the ground (or keep the "Feed Peter & Roxanne fund" going for very long time). More than likely Jacques figured once he left the Technocratic movement that the idea of a society similar to his "RBE" would eventually come about naturally enough as society and technology improved. After joining up with Roxanne and later Peter he would start all this little business with ensuing legal wrangling bullshit to capitalise on this and invent some nonsense that it was not his idea (along with a plethora of documentaries with people stroking his ego raw). Simply put you have three lump heads who have no clue, they are talking purely for the sake of being credited with something that is not their idea. They simply are more concerned now with their image and ego and preventing anything actually happening and damaging any real legitimate attempts to bring this about if the concept becomes mainstream.

They are wasting peoples time and money by going from city regurgitating the same nonsense and poorly researched materials and what they are doing is cruel and irresponsible by manipulating those not given the chance to develop their critical skills to boycott and protest (Protest what has managed to elude me) and begin to slide down the slippery slope into fanaticism that led to the current state of groups such as PETA, another group headed by self-appointed leaders and has gone to the extent of supporting and defending terrorism in the form of the ALF.

Jacques, Peter and Roxanne have this nonsense that this is somehow related to the civil rights movement (just like PETA) and are yet at the same time pissing on the graves of those who died to make genuine change (still giving people the impression that there is some big bogey man out to get us – the fact that people are still handing out the same shitty first movie strengthens this). The fact that these are same views shared by many of the remaining scientists left in that faux movement and they are not wanting to listen to any of these “dissenting views” clearly shows where they are going by removing the very people who are actually needed. Without stopping this nonsense mark my word it ends up the same as every other “movement” seen so far: Celebrities and politicians joining and donating just to improve their image but again not doing anything at all, complete saturation of the media and it coming up in practically every Disney and Pixar movie.

In order for the implantation of an RBE to be successful or the concept goes mainstream the following must occur:

- 1) They have to accept the fact that they were never elected into place. It's practically impossible for the entire “movement” to progress with them doing annual promotional work and making all the decisions (it's also unfair)
- 2) They have to hold back the advertising campaign completely, as stated earlier if every member donated a mere $100.00 we could get serious funding for existing research centres. Again people hate having rhetoric shoved down their throat without evidence.
- 3) Any of the proposed cities are not necessary for now at all and both the film and theme park are totally unnecessary

Jacque says never give anyone the right to their own opinion and isn't in any way exempt from this he should simply say “I don't know” instead of spouting the rubbish he does (since if people want to get the same information they just have to watch the same lectures, and what the hell does he know ?) the fact that he has no credentials or respect for the scientific and academic peer review process (along with the other two) means that they simply don't have the right to do what they are doing, and also why moderates and the majority of people in the world will easily see through them once given the chance (you can replace tyranny with another form of tyranny and called it democracy but it's still tyranny). The three of them preach about the fact that politicians and corporations would be the first in line to prevent this from coming to fruition but the fact is they are the only ones that are stifling progress. This is the real tragedy of it all: the very concept that they say could very well save humanity for the time being is getting dragged through mire for the sake of the ego's of three very irresponsible and selfish people. Same shit, different name

2. Thanks for the post Shane.

An interesting and fun read, I am glad you bothered to make this for the blog its a good addition to the existing posts we have made here, and I think its also a relief to see that other people have observed the ridiculous nature of their movement.

3. Yeah thanks I know there is a few spelling/grammer mistakes here and there but i was in the middle of alot project work for college.For the same reason I was unable to to get to Z-Day and find any of the remaining less fanatical types and fellow scientists to at least give them the other side of the story(or at least directing their energies towards more constructive action).Jacque,Roxanne and Peter should be in Dublin during August for more of their Vogon poetry so I might be able to prevent any well meaning people making a mistake of funding these freeloaders.

- o hahaha I chuckled at those hitch hikers clips, the poetry and the videoing themselves and making their own money out of leaves etc...

People seem to like this post, its been linked on the zeitgeist facebook as well, and all the ‘dissenters’ dig it.

- Hey anticultist I see you’ve had your first run in with a zeitgeister from the Emerald Isle(Xtylish) courtesy of my flirtations on my native forum. For any one from there(or indeed any where else)just stumbling from there to this article excuse my language on this post above(and bad grammar) just keep in mind I was inbetween three major projects for college and so my adrenaline was constantly upped on the ante during writing it so.

yes, well, lets get to work then and make tvp obsolete the old fashioned way.

- That quote from the former President of GreenPeace is quite revealing.

Hmmm...

Pretty much everything said here is what I’m thinking now.

Great read BTW, I had the same romanticism with them being equal to the Civil Rights Movement after watching Zeitgeist: Addendum and seeing the MLK quote on their website (which is not there anymore) which has been used before by other organizations:

http://www.thezeitgeistmovement.com/joomla/index.php?option=com_kunena&Itemid=99999&func=view&catid=231&id=242914#242945

From Shane:

“Without stopping this nonsense mark my word it ends up the same as every other “movement” seen so far: Celebrities and politicians joining and donating just to improve their image but again not doing anything at all, complete saturation of the media and it coming up in practically every Disney and Pixar movie.”

Politician: VTV (check)

Actress: TVPChallenge (check)

It’s funny that you say that because I noticed that TVP chick works or worked for NBC and comes out of nowhere as pro-TVP. You just can’t make this stuff up:

Sources:

<http://www.imdb.com/name/nm3281001>

vimeo.com/user3047967

anewworldsociety.ning.com/profile/BrandyHume

<http://www.facebook.com/TVPchallenge>

<http://www.blogtalkradio.com/v-radio/2010/03/16/the-venus-project-challenge-brandy-hume-interview>

Then Peter Joseph makes this comment about if the Zeitgeist Movement was to be on NBC:

http://www.thezeitgeistmovement.com/joomla/index.php?option=com_kunena&Itemid=99999&func=view&catid=9&id=250977#250993

From Peter Joseph:

“The films were an “inspiration” for TZM – not necessarily defining of it. I know it sounds like an absurd formality, but when one of us is on NBC and the reporter says ‘so- your movement is based on those joseph films, right?’ We say:

‘No, the films were a inspiration- the Movement is its own entity.’ “

And to add icing on the cake, I find it funny that there is or was a program on NBC called ZEITGEIST:

<http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/26852192>

Forgive me, I'm off and on with TV personally.

I guess that goes back to the art of advertising:

<http://anticultist.wordpress.com/2010/01/05/the-art-of-advertising-within-the-zeitgeist-movement>

But I will admit, before Zeitgeist: Addendum, I wasn't aware of an RBE at all and didn't learn about people who talked about post-scarcity before, but looking at history and seeing where all this is coming from has become obvious and I understand the title of this blog. Reading this makes me want to go back to college.

Again, thanks for sharing Shane.

7. to be perfectly blunt, nothing that TVP has to offer is anything more than at best the sum of Civil Engineering + Sociology + Energy Science applied to economics.

This isn't new, and its not revolutionary. They don't have one single good idea that ten other people didn't think of first.

The only difference is that they are willing to appropriate and lie more than the average movement and have no qualms about pretending to know things that they don't.

This brings us to the other side. While they repeat a lot of good ideas, they also repeat as many garbage ones, and Jaques for being a French guy seems to have stolen all of the main cultist axioms from Armageddon Theology.

There is nothing new about TVP, all they have done is bring a large collection of cutting edge ideas in to one place and then make believe that they are the only ones to ever think of them.

Meanwhile, I actually do have original thoughts, and for this reason its important to ban me immediately.

- Yes try and get your local government to set up hydroponic farming on either a community/commercial scale or set up grants for people in your locale to set up their own means of becoming self sufficient with other technologies like I have been researching here: <http://www.rbefoundation.com/group/topic.php?f=390&t=1735&hilit=food+biochemistry>

- It isn't hard to run for local office. There are tons of spots that are uncontested because there are never any opponents. That's how you bring about the sort of change you're wanting.

9. i don't know about starting a new movement, however, i am increasingly feeling like thats the only good way out of this.

I'd like to heal the assorted splinter groups together, but that seems unlikely.

I don't want to go egotist, but it increasingly seems the only way to get anything done.

And then I'd need people to do things i can't do like techie stuff.

This leads me back to RBEF, which is the most on the ball of the splinter groups.

It also brings up face to face to peer at the core problems and issues which none of these groups or any humans anywhere seem to be able to solve, which is generating a viable and lucid metaprocess.

I'm burned out. Way out. Way burned. Everything has been flipped around upside down.

In a sane world TZM would be using me to draft and I'd have the full attention and energy of hundreds of folks.

A more sane RBEF would actually read and respond to my posts rather than more or less allow me to operate as an internal splinter group.

Today I found that my website for the duration of the election- mytalktoday.com has been taken down- so much for all the fun i was going to have with i-told-you-sos in 2012.

Lately i find that my best friend is autocad. It doesn't argue with me or make demands that i figure out how to compensate for its insanity or stupidity or greed or fear. I draw, it looks good, i feel good. But nobody but me gets to really appreciate it.

Rambling on, I know, but how would we start a new group and make it work? from here?

prometheuspan said this on July 13, 2010 at 5:07 am | Reply

- I know how you feel p man at this point As I said befor over at RBEF the one thing we could use is people from existing NPOs etc. to join our ranks .Not only do they know the ropes and how to get things organised they already have the commitment to doing the volunteer work needed without any excuses(ideal since the idea of an RBE would fit nicely into the their goals) and more importantly teach us a thing or two with regards to how to get things done.That was the problem with TVP/TZM and now RBEF ,which is a shame now because now I actually have the lucidity and free time to get some work done in an area I might have some use in that isnt garbage – not great but not garbage either.To be honest p man with regards to starting up a new movement I really dont know if that would work.Ughh maybe Im just frustrated too or just rambling nonsensically on from a hard day working at college for the summer.

- Ughh.Im starting to realise something.Maybe working with like minded local governments as well as with NPOs/NGOs etc on a global scale really is the only solution .

Youre right.You are so very right.At this point it seems the only way possible.At least then you dont get caught up in the whole woo that TZM/TVP,RBOSE and then RBEF got caught up.Maybe this whole thing of changing the world for the better needs unsung heroes working in the background. Maybe we need to rethink our whole strategy here with regards to an RBE. Work closely with local governments and the other groups as I stated before informing them of our goals and research and implementing an RBE through them (in particular green tech). Perhaps that's the problem: groups that say they are going to change the world through a revolution usually end up dying out, fading into obscurity and becoming the butt end of jokes and pop culture a victim of their own ego and desire for recognition. Perhaps the less mainstream society knows about this the better.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/World_revolution#Post_War_Two

An RBE is going to happen anyways perhaps its best we just work with research centres, thorough politics etc for a silent revolution.

“You’re nutty as a fruitcake.”

Perhaps I am or perhaps I just need some sleep.

Shane Nolan said this on July 17, 2010 at 10:53 pm | Reply

10. shane, i am holding out a hope that RBEF can pull it together.

Otherwise, I do have my own whole wiki and face book, and the more i think about it the more i can prolly do a lot more than I have so far.

This whole thing has put me face up against the whole problem in some new ways and this has got me to thinking in new directions, and also i find myself letting go of the idea of trying to work within a group to start as much.

Increasingly, my own competence outweighs any other concern about such groups and I realize that as much as I would like to find a group worthy of my participation and on track- there isn't one.

And damnit. Humanity needs one. At least one. One honest to goodness not sheeplized, not evil, not doublethought, not stupid, not dumberdowned, not lazy, not distracted, not befuddled lucid problem solving progressive scientific organization for positive social evolution.

Its not that I want to be different or better than other such movements. I wish to god that there were movements i could join. But there aren't. One way or another they are all a waste of time and energy and that in and of itself is humanities number one tragedy. If real change is going to come, what quarter can it come from?

I realize more and more every day that i have a profound and unique responsibility. The question becomes how to pull that off, without egotism, and how to hand it off to humanity considering that it would appear that being the start up dictator is more or less required.

If anybody has any leads on organizations i wouldn't have to sell my soul to or doublethink my way through believing could actually have an impact... I'm all ears.

Otherwise, its looking to me like it starts with me.

prometheuspan said this on July 19, 2010 at 3:47 pm | Reply

- o I see what you mean this whole new drama that is going on now at RBEF is disheartening. I agree trying to get people to do anything at all there is a hurdle to say the least (perhaps TZMs passifying techniques to prevent real action worked too good). The PreResearch section is a ghost town at this point even though it should be the one area that is bubbling with activity. I have a few ideas on getting new recruits over there by weeding out the dilligent from the woo seekers by scouring the net outside of TZM but alas there doesnt seem to be much point. If the basic structure of the whole group isnt going to set up by those with that responsibility then is there really any point for any of us to be there?

Anyways Ill try to implement those ideas see if they work and maybe get more of the Brainstorming done. However if the fates have written a different path then at least youll get a few more people to help you out if starting from scratch is the only option.

At this point I going to make some attempt to at least get my local government to set up some sort of a sustainable process for keeping my locale green. It might not be world changing but its a start.

it would be nice to see you there on the rights and responsibilities thread.

actually, you 2 anticultist, this is what it really comes down to all of it.

<http://www.rbefoundation.com/grouptopic.php?f=412&t=2355>

TZM fails because they don't demand responsibilities from the admins and don't link rights to responsibilities.

RBEF was looking like it was going to go that same route until i broke thru with cosar. Now lets just try to get this to carry over to DM and Venux.
